The Frisco (Dallas-Ft Worth) Community

Frisco was the fastest growing city in the United States in 2009, and the fastest-growing city in the nation from 2000 to 2009. In the late 1990s, the northern Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex suburban development tide hit the northern border of Plano and spilled into Frisco, sparking explosive growth into the 2000s. Like many of the cities located in the booming northern suburbs of Dallas, Frisco serves as a bedroom community for many professionals who work in the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex.

Frisco's business environment is thriving, and it seems that the city is welcoming new businesses every day. Whether a brand-new business or a major corporation that is relocating its headquarters, Frisco offers a great quality of life for young professionals and families.

(Dallas Ft Worth)

There's no shortage of fantastic dining in the city of Frisco. Several walkable dining areas feature a growing array of many locally owned steakhouses and new restaurants.

With more than 90 miles of natural and paved trails for walkers, runners, hikers and bikers, Frisco offers plenty of opportunities for residents to get out and stretch their legs, get some exercise or simply enjoy the North Texas sunshine.

Frisco is also home to more than 30 parks, totaling more than 1,300 acres to explore. The Frisco Commons Park features three pavilions which are frequently used for events, a trout-stocked pond, the Frisco Veterans Memorial Plaza and a paved trail with several interpretive trails running through the park. In addition to these amenities, Frisco Commons Park is also home to Hope Park, a 15,000 square foot addition that features a spray park and two large playgrounds.

Public art is also vitally important in Frisco and so much so that it's supported by a city ordinance. In 2002, the City Council passed an ordinance creating the Frisco Public Art Program. A percentage of capital project funds are used for the installation of public artworks. The mission of the program is to enhance Frisco's cultural and artistic vibrancy by providing contemporary art for the enjoyment of visitors and residents alike. Frisco's collection of public art has more than 60 pieces.

And speaking of sports, The Star, a 91-acre mixed-use development, has taken shape in Frisco. The Ford Center and The Star, the Dallas Cowboys World

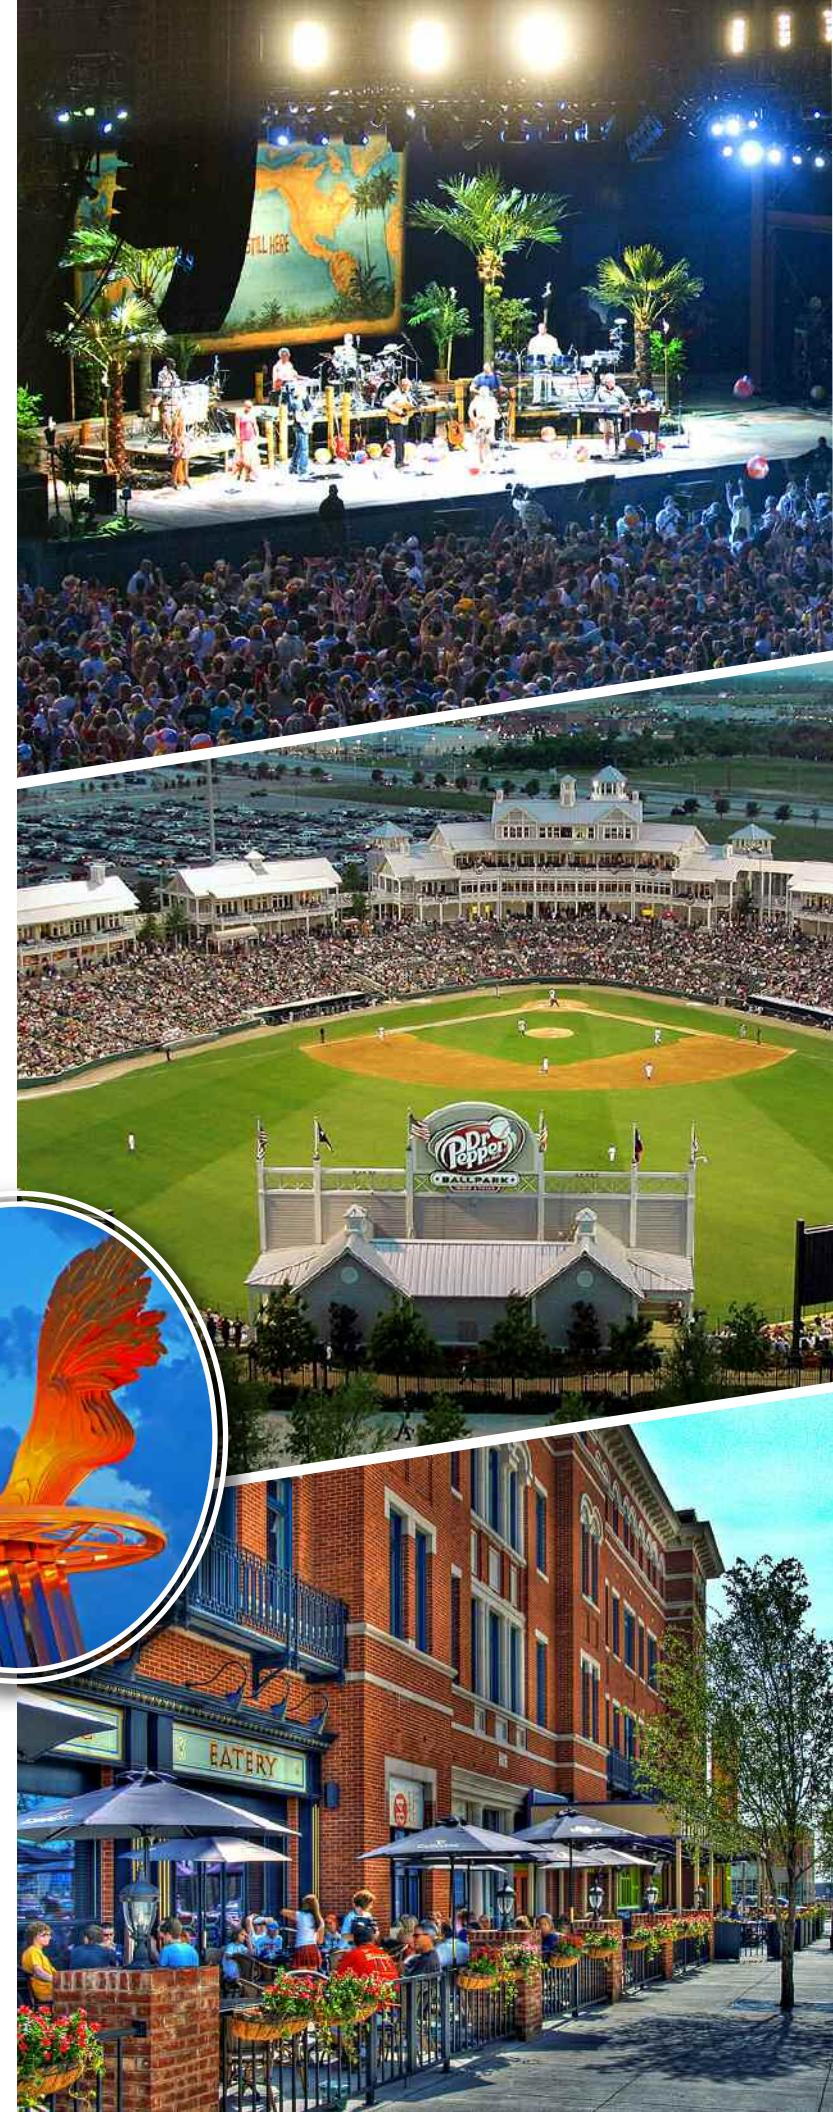

Headquarters, celebrated with a ribbon cutting ceremony in August 2016. The completion of the facilities, including the 12,000-seat indoor stadium, a plaza in front of the stadium, two outdoor practice fields and underground parking garage, marks the first phase of the enormous project. In addition to being the practice home of the Dallas Cowboys, the Ford Center at The Star also hosts games for Frisco ISD's eight high school varsity football teams, as well as several other sporting and entertainment events.

For family fun, Frisco has everything from live music to lazy rivers. The Frisco Roughriders Choctaw Lazy River is a 400-foot figure eight, filled with more than 68,000 gallons of water. Other family fun options are the National Soccer Hall of Fame and the National Videogame Museum, the only museum in the U.S. devoted to the history of videogames. The 10,000 square-foot museum is in the Frisco Discover Center and features dozens of interactive exhibits, thousands of artifacts and educational programming.

For music enthusiasts, Frisco has several live music venues, music festivals and special music events. Stan's Main Street in downtown Frisco offers live music on the patio every week.
