The Airport

The Shreveport Airport Authority (Authority) is charged with the operation and maintenance of Shreveport Downtown Airport (DTN), a general aviation airport, and Shreveport Regional Airport (SHV), a commercial small hub airport. Both airports serve the citizens of Shreveport and the surrounding region, including North Louisiana, East Texas, and Southwest Arkansas. Combined, there are more than 30 scheduled arriving and departing daily flights among the four carriers that serve SHV. In addition to the nine non-stop destinations currently offered, travelers from Shreveport can connect to nearly 250 other domestic and international destinations through one-stop service at the cities served by American, Delta, United, and Allegiant. The Authority is represented by a five-person voluntary board which serves on rotating terms. The board members are appointed on a staggered basis by the Mayor of Shreveport. The Director of Airports (Director) reports to the Authority.

AeroPark, the Shreveport Regional Airport Industrial Park, is a premier aviation facility and has more than 220 acres of prime land available for development, offering industry the opportunity for immediate expansion or relocation. This central U.S. location makes the park readily accessible for any aircraft/aerospace-related industry requiring taxiways and ramp access. Plus, AeroPark offers access to two interstates, warehouse and distribution facilities and private office space. From Shreveport, one can easily connect their business with the world. The park is owned by the City of Shreveport under the management of the Authority.

With a budgeted staff of more than 80 employees, the Authority has a current operating budget of more than $22 million and a capital budget of more than $70 million dollars. In 2019, more than 683,000 passengers flew through SHV. In 2021, more than 504,000 passengers used SHV and annual operations were nearly 33,000. Major tenants at SHV include Western Global Airlines' maintenance facility and the TacAir FBO facilities.

Welcome to Shreveport-Bossier

There's a side of Louisiana with which you may not be familiar. You have to experience it to fully understand. The northwest corner of the state, in and around Shreveport-Bossier, is a little different than the rest of Louisiana. We're a mixture of spicy Cajun attitude and wide-open Texas spirit.

With five riverboat casinos and one horseracing track and casino, we offer our own brand of alluring bright lights and fast-paced gaming action. Let our exclusive boutiques fuel your shopping urge, or explore endless options at the Louisiana Boardwalk – the largest outlet, lifestyle, dining and entertainment destination in Louisiana.

Revel in our family-oriented Mardi Gras celebrations as you reach for your share of more than eight million beads and other throws. Take in a foreign, classic, or independent film at the dynamic Robinson Film Center in downtown Shreveport after dining on the balcony at Abby Singer's Bistro. Relive our rich history with a tour of the Municipal Auditorium, where Elvis Presley got his start on the Louisiana Hayride.

Explore the stars through interactive exhibits at Sci-Port Discovery Center. Go on an undersea adventure at Shreveport Aquarium. Head outdoors to view and zip line over alligators in their natural habitat at Gators and Friends Alligator Park and Exotic Zoo or take a short drive from the city and relax with swimming, boating or fishing at Cypress Black Bayou.

After you've worked up an appetite, sink your teeth into savory Cajun and Creole traditions and full-flavored Southern cuisine at Herby-K's, have some of the best Mexican food in the region at Superior Grill, or have a muffy at Fertitta's Delicatessen. These are just a few of the dining and entertainment options that make Shreveport-Bossier City so unique.

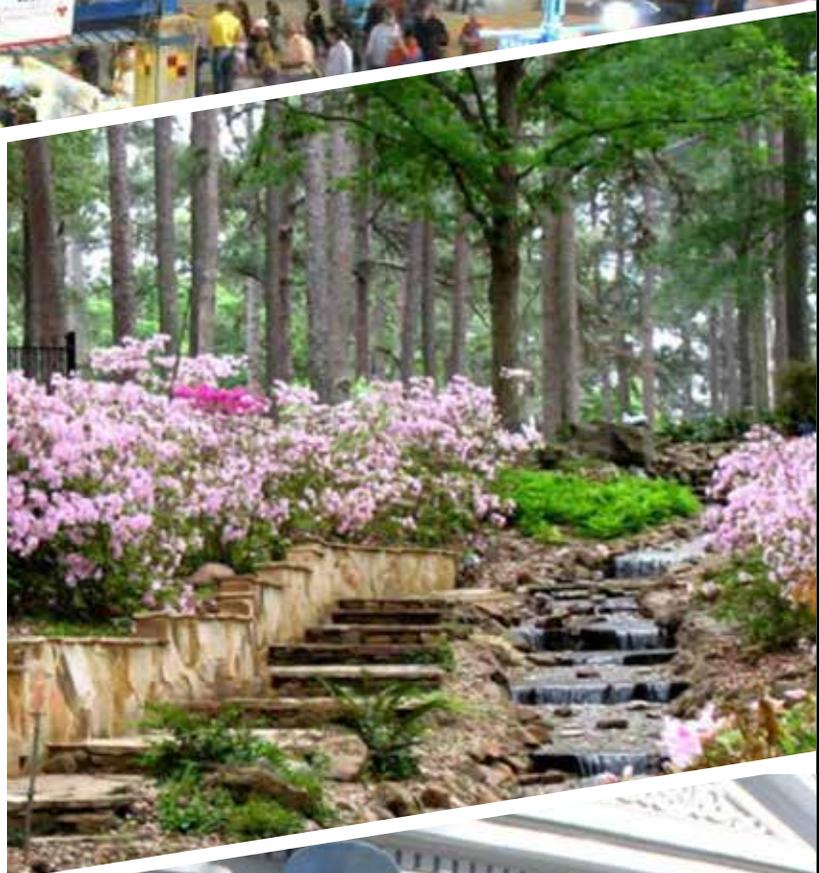

The History

The sister cities of Shreveport and Bossier City have been here for more than 175 years. The Caddo Indians were the first to call the area home, and shortly after, early pioneers discovered the rich, fertile land along the Red River.

The formal establishment of our cities began with the Shreve Town Company – a group of eight businessmen who were determined to establish a town. They obtained the land from Larkin Edwards, who had acquired it from the Caddo Indians.

Though the land was fertile, the river was unavailable due to the “Great Raft,” a 165-mile-long logjam. In the 1830s, steamboat captain Henry Miller Shreve cleared the logjam, opening the way for trade and allowing Shreveport to grow. The city was incorporated in 1839.

Shortly after, neighboring Cane’s Landing, a small trading post in the 1840s, began to grow. In 1907, the site was officially named Bossier City. In the 1930s, Barksdale Air Force Base arrived to become the world’s largest airfield of that era and a key player in World War II.

Shake, Rattle & Roses...

Hailed as the place where Elvis got his start on the Louisiana Hayride at Municipal Auditorium, Shreveport-Bossier was the nurturing ground for early blues and a special brand of music called rockabilly. From 1948 to 1960, the Louisiana Hayride was a live radio program broadcast by KWKH from the auditorium. On October 16, 1954, Elvis made his first of 50 Hayride appearances.

Shreveport music legend Huddie "Lead Belly" Ledbetter was born on a plantation in 1885 in nearby Mooringsport. He became known as "King of the 12-string blues" and wrote many timeless songs, the most notable of which are "Goodnight Irene" and "House of the Rising Sun." A life-sized statue of him stands at Texas and Marshall streets in downtown Shreveport. He died in 1949 and was interred in the cemetery of Shiloh Baptist Church in Mooringsport, about 13 miles outside of Shreveport. The Lead Belly Blues Festival, held each spring, is a tribute to Lead Belly's legacy.

The R.W. Norton Art Gallery, which opened in 1966, showcases American and European art in a 20-room gallery. The complex is located on 40 landscaped acres with 40,000 azaleas, ponds and gardens and more than 10,000 plants. Among other treasures, tour highlights include the works of American greats Frederic Remington and Charles M. Russell, and antique books, including an extremely rare, five-volume double-elephant folio by James Audubon.

The Robinson Film Center in downtown Shreveport is a dynamic venue for independent, international and classic cinema, as well as a popular downtown dining destination. The film center regularly hosts film festivals as well as special screenings featuring the likes of Val Kilmer, Oliver Stone, Nicolas Cage and Matthew Broderick. It's located in the West Edge Arts District in downtown Shreveport.

Journey to Barksdale Air Force Base in Bossier City to hear more about this key player in World War II. The Eighth Air Force Museum, which features more than 30 historic aircraft, chronicles the history of the base and that of the nation.
